Dietary carotenoids, other than alpha-carotene, in a soybean oil-based diet affect growth performance, immune response, fecal lipids, and liver weight in broiler chickens. Two experiments were conducted to evaluate the effects of alpha- and beta-carotene on growth performance, immune response, liver weight, fecal lipid content, and carcass yield in broilers fed a diet containing soybean oil (SBO). In the first experiment, 10 male broilers from each of the seven dietary treatments (control, 0.5 mg/kg; 1 mg/kg; 2 mg/kg of alpha-carotene; 2 mg/kg; 4 mg/kg; 8 mg/kg; and 10 mg/kg) were individually fed the diets from 20 to 42 d of age. Carotenoid levels were determined in the diets and livers at 42 d of age. Body weight, feed intake, feed conversion, liver weight, and carotenoid concentrations were analyzed for all the birds. Data were analyzed by analysis of variance, and the means were separated by Duncan's multiple range test. The results indicated that liver weight and carcass yield of chickens were not significantly affected by dietary carotenoid levels. SBO-fed chickens had significantly higher levels of alpha-carotene in the liver than those fed the control diet at all carotenoid levels. The concentrations of beta-carotene in the livers of birds fed the diet containing 4, 8, and 10 mg/kg of beta-carotene were significantly higher than those fed the control and other diets containing alpha-carotene. Feed conversion was higher for the control diet, and the results were significant. Hematocrits, total protein, albumin, and globulin levels were not affected by dietary carotenoid levels. The results suggested that alpha- and beta-carotene could be used as a potential feed additive to increase the levels of carotenoids in the liver without affecting growth performance and
